Co-pilot showed no signs of distress

No evidence of trouble, terrorism ties for German accused of crashing plane

Los Angeles Times

The 28-year-old German co-pilot accused of deliberately crashing a Germanwings plane Tuesday and killing all 150 people on board had cleared all tests of his flightworthiness and gave no sign of being troubled, according to his employers and German media reports.

Andreas Lubitz had flown with the Lufthansa subsidiary Germanwings since September 2013, logging 630 flight hours without incident and dividing his free time between his parents' home in Montabaur and a small apartment in Duesseldorf.

Duesseldorf was the Germanwings hub from which Lubitz flew and the destination of the Airbus A320 that slammed into a French mountainside en route from Barcelona.

The discovery from listening to voice recordings captured in the flight's final moments that Lubitz voluntarily typed in codes directing the plane to descend, then refused to unlock the cabin door so that the pilot could enter turned what had been a crash investigation into a murder probe.

French prosecutor Brice Robin said on Thursday that based on the audio recording found in one of the plane's "black boxes," investigators believe that as the plane reached cruising altitude, its pilot, Capt. Patrick Sonderheimer, left the cockpit to go to the bathroom. As is standard procedure, the control of the plane was left in the hands of the autopilot and the co-pilot.

Andreas Lubitz

As Sonderheimer left the cockpit, Lubitz typed a command in the jet's computer causing the plane to lose altitude. He then refused to open the locked cockpit door during the following eight minutes, as Flight 9525 neared the mountain.

At a news conference in France, Robin said Lubitz's actions during the flight have been "analyzed as willingness to destroy the aircraft."

The key strokes needed to order the plane to descend "must be voluntary" and are not accidental, Robin said.

As the plane glided to Earth, the recording caught the pilot first knocking, then calling over an intercom, then banging and finally trying to break through the locked cockpit door. The recording caught no response from Lubitz, only steady breathing that indicated he remained alive. It also recorded the screams of the passengers.

Robin avoided calling the crash a suicide.

"Usually, when someone commits suicide, he is alone," he said. "When you are responsible for 150 people at the back, I don't necessarily call that a suicide."

Lubitz had no known association with extremist or terrorist groups, German Interior Minister Thomas de Maiziere said. Police were searching his Duesseldorf apartment and his parents' home in Montabaur, Der Spiegel magazine reported.

Lufthansa Chief Executive Carsten Spohr on Thursday said Lubitz had passed all medical and aviation tests "with flying colors" after flight training that began in 2008. He worked for 11 months as a steward while waiting for a pilot's position to open with Germanwings, Spohr said.

Lubitz interrupted his flight training for three months in 2008, Spohr said, declining to disclose the reasons for the break, citing German regulations on the privacy of medical records. Spohr also asserted that such interruptions in training are not uncommon.

In Montabaur, acquaintances said that Lubitz appeared fine when they saw him last fall as he renewed his glider pilot's license.

"He was happy he had the job with Germanwings and he was doing well," said a member of the glider club, Peter Ruecker. "He gave off a good feeling."

At the crash site Thursday, investigators continue retrieving remains and pieces of the plane, shattered from the high-speed impact of the crash.

Airlines change cockpit rules

The Associated Press

French prosecutors' assertion that this week's air crash of a German airliner was a deliberate act of co-pilot Andreas Lubitz prompted quick moves toward stricter cockpit rules—and calls for more.

Airlines in Europe are not required to have two people in the cockpit at all times, unlike the standard U.S. operating procedure, which was changed after the 9/11 attacks to require a flight attendant to take the spot of a briefly departing pilot.

Canada and Germany's biggest airlines, including Lufthansa and Air Berlin, as well as low-cost European carriers Easyjet and Norwegian Air Shuttle, announced new rules Thursday requiring two crew members to always be present.

Some experts said even two isn't enough, and called for rules to require three.

"The flight deck is capable of accommodating three pilots and there shouldn't ever be a situation where there is only one person in the cockpit," said James Hall, a former chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, referring to the "jump seats" all airliners are equipped with.

Quick and dirty sex advice: Spring 2015

Anna Pulley
» redeye@redeyechicago.com
» @annapulley

Happy spring, folks. Here are some short advice questions and answers to get you sprung (or convince you to go back into hibernation, as it were). If you're hankering for more quick 'n' dirties, read winter's edition at redeyechicago.com/askannawinter.

Help! I'm in my first relationship and I'm worried I'll [bleep] it up. How do I play it cool?

Don't. None of us know what we're doing. We're all faking it! Luxuriate in all of your awkward authenticity. But also, probably don't text so much. Wheeeeeee.

When does Facebook stalking become creepy?

Around the time you're asking a stranger on the Internet for advice about it.

I am a well-endowed man ...

I'm going to stop you for a minute. As your trusted adviser, I would encourage you to lead with something else. Your well-endowed sense of compassion, perhaps? Your well-endowed knowledge of fruit bats? Your pick.

... who feels more appreciated for my body and not my personality or intelligence. How can I get a little respect around here?

You probably should stop wearing the Borat swimsuit on dates. Oh, or don't date people who don't respect you.

How come a lot of lesbians won't date a bisexual girl?

Fear. Stereotypes. A bad past experience with a bisexual. Jenny Schecter. Don't worry though, you don't have to date those lesbians.

What do women want?

More episodes of "Orange is the New Black." Pay equity. A Chipotle burrito WITH THE TORTILLA BECAUSE EFF THAT BULL[BLEEP] BURRITO BOWL. More time to herself. More time with you. Silence. More piggyback rides (high heels are tiny feet-guillotines of awful). Less mansplaining. More manscaping. Clothing with some goddamn pockets. (While we're at it—standardization of clothing sizes: Why am I a 6 in one brand and a 12 in another?) An end to systemic racial oppression. Channing Tatum. SOMEONE WHO TEXTS BACK. The abolishment of eyelash curlers (tiny eye-guillotines of awful). Less media dedicated to making us feel crappy about our bodies. Sex. Big love. Big dreams. Big sandwiches.

Garcia goes on attack in 2nd runoff debate

Chicago Tribune

Rahm Emanuel and Jesus "Chuy" Garcia clashed in an argumentative second debate Thursday night, a face-to-face meeting in which the challenger tried to put the mayor on the defensive by mocking his leadership of Chicago.

With early voting underway ahead of the April 7 election, Emanuel tried to counter Garcia's aggressiveness by warning that the challenger's lack of a financial game plan for the city would lead to "red ink" and a loss of companies and jobs.

The hour-long debate at the downtown studios of WFLD-Ch. 32, found both candidates talking over each other as they were asked about the financial challenges facing both City Hall and Chicago Public Schools.

When the mayor talked about closing a coal-fired plant in Little Village, where Garcia lives, the challenger responded: "You singlehandedly closed that? People have been working on that for 10 years. You were still in Washington."

At another point, Garcia was asked about his opposition to the use of lakefront land between Soldier Field and McCormick Place for a museum to display the collections of movie mogul and "Star Wars" creator George Lucas. The challenger accused Emanuel of deciding to award the land for "a monument to Darth Vader" through mayoral "fiat."

"You're not the king of the city," said Garcia, who added, "If you want to put it there, ask the voters."

But Emanuel countered, saying Garcia's vacillating over the use of city parkland for a proposed Barack Obama presidential library was emblematic of the problem in the Cook County commissioner's governing style.

Rahm Emanuel and Jesus "Chuy" Garcia prepare to face off in their second mayoral debate in Chicago on Thursday. The debate was held at Fox 32 Chicago. CHRIS SWEDA/TRIBUNE

Emanuel, who served as Obama's first White House chief of staff, said he has been "clear and consistent" on bringing the Obama library to the president's hometown against competing bids from institutions in New York and Hawaii. Emanuel said he showed what business leaders are looking for from a mayor.

"They bet on leadership that's consistent, and if you're not consistent, you can put all those economic gains and jobs at risk," he said.

Garcia said he always supported bringing the Obama library to Chicago, and when it was clear that parkland would be necessary, the challenger said he backed the decision.

The challenger criticized Emanuel as more invested in the city's downtown business district than in the outlying neighborhoods. Emanuel said bringing new businesses and jobs to the downtown "gives us the resources to invest in the neighborhoods."

In a reflection of how the Emanuel camp viewed his performance, the mayor made a rare visit to the post-debate spin room, where he said of Garcia: "Attacking somebody is not an attack on the challenges facing the city of Chicago."

While Emanuel didn't go on the offensive much during the debate, he did afterward. The mayor criticized Garcia for only recently coming around to the mayor's idea of backing an expanded state sales tax on services to shore up the city's finances.

"He's now come over and supported my position," Emanuel said. "Leadership requires being concise, consistent and steady. ... If you don't know where you stand, nobody else knows where you stand and you cannot get the job done."

Debate soundbites

ON WHY RESIDENTS SHOULD NOT MOVE OUT OF THE CITY ...

Garcia: "Chicago has many advantages as a location for families. I recognize that we have some significant challenges facing people in the city of Chicago including levels of violence in many Chicago communities. ... When we have better schools, when we have safer communities and good transportation, it will be an asset to live in the city of Chicago."

Emanuel: We're going to continue to invest in our schools so you have great neighborhood schools, great public transportation, a vibrant park system and a quality of life to raise a family and make the most of your life with the job that you have. We have a great city and a great future if we're willing to do the tough things necessary."

ON BIKE LANES IN THE CITY ...

Garcia: "I support the network of bike lanes that exist in the city of Chicago. If we seek to expand bike lanes further, we need to consult and engage community residents. That is my approach to doing things. I believe in being inclusive. I believe in hearing people out. If in certain communities people don't want the bike lanes, we ought to hear them and we ought to rationalize as to why that may be a good idea. So far, I tend to support most of the bike lanes that have been created."

Emanuel: "There's a place we finally agree, right there. I have supported expanding our bike lanes because first and foremost it's about safety, then jobs and economic growth. ... Separating bikes and cars creates a type of safety you want. Bikers have to observe the laws just like people driving. In addition to that, we now have a vibrant tech scene in the city of Chicago we never had before because the bike system has allowed us to recruit people to the city and companies to the city because it's part of an active transportation system."

"Neither one of them come off as terrorists."

—Manchinique Bates, 23, who identified herself as Illinois National Guardsman Hasan Edmonds' (right) sister, saying Thursday her 22-year-old brother and her cousin, Jonas Edmonds (left), 29, never spoke of any extreme beliefs. Federal authorities alleged Thursday that the cousins from Aurora plotted to have one carry out a terrorist attack at a northern Illinois military facility while the other traveled overseas to fight with Islamic State. The cousins made an initial appearance in federal court Thursday after being arrested Wednesday. They are charged with conspiring to provide material support and resources to a foreign terrorist organization, a charge carrying up to 15 years in prison on conviction. TRIBUNE

Operator account of O'Hare CTA crash released

Chicago Tribune

Federal officials released more than 1,600 pages of documents Thursday in their investigation of last year's CTA Blue Line crash at O'Hare Airport, including comments from the train's driver, who hasn't spoken publicly but told investigators she dozed off before the crash.

Included in the document release is an 81-page transcript of an interview with Brittney Haywood, in which she told investigators she grew tired over the course of her shift but couldn't recall exactly when she fell asleep.

Investigators said she smashed the train through a barrier and landed it atop the escalator. The crash injured 30 people and caused roughly $9 million in damage.

"Yeah, I'm not clear as to when I actually ... dozed off," Haywood said to investigators. "I was operating normal up until I reached O'Hare Terminal. I was tired. I didn't get any sleep the day before and I might—I have—I became sleepy and I nodded off into the terminal at O'Hare."

The interview with Haywood, who was fired by the CTA two weeks after the crash, are part of the National Transportation Safety Board's accident docket. It includes transcripts from interviews with various personnel, summaries of inspections and other materials.

The NTSB report on the crash, which will include a determination of probable cause, will be released at a later date, the agency said.

Officials said last year that Haywood admitted dozing off before the crash and told investigators she also dozed off in February 2014 at the controls of her train at the Blue Line stop at Belmont. She started working at the CTA in April 2013 and was qualified to operate trains in January 2014, officials said.

According to the documents released Thursday, Haywood testified that she was "aware" at the Rosemont station, which is about five minutes away from O'Hare. However, the transcript reads, she said the heat on the train began to make her "hot and tired."

"The only thing was the heat. I kept turning the heat off at Harlem because that became you know a distraction to me ... I believe it took a toll on my body as far as making me tired. So I did turn the heat off at Harlem."

Haywood worked as a fill-in employee, and her hours were irregular, according to the newly released documents.

Haywood told investigators she had slept before her last shift, according to the documents, but a review of her cellphone records showed she did not sleep as long as she said.

The report lists telephone calls and texts she made in the morning and afternoon hours on that Sunday before her 8:40 p.m. shift, at the same time she had told investigators she had slept. She had worked 10 of the previous 11 days before the crash, the report noted, in part because she worked a double shift and on one of her days off.

After the crash, the CTA changed how rail operators are scheduled, although the transit agency maintained that Haywood's work schedule should not have resulted in fatigue affecting her performance. The CTA also made other changes at the O'Hare station.

It reduced the speed limit of approaching trains to 15 mph from 25 mph and moved "trip arms" farther from the end of the platform. The devices are supposed to stop a train traveling above the speed limit.

The CTA said it is re-emphasizing fatigue-awareness training for all rail operators.

The CTA on Friday reiterated its position that Haywood's schedule shouldn't have been a factor, noting that she worked 55 hours in seven days beforehand and was off for 18 hours before the shift during which the crash occurred.

"There was nothing about that operator's work schedule that suggests fatigue should have played a role in her performance," spokesman Brian Steele said. REDEYE CONTRIBUTED.

Hold the phone, I was too hard on Illinois college basketball.

Thanks to a 63-48 win over Seattle on Wednesday, your 1963 NCAA champion Loyola Ramblers have moved to the championship round of the College Basketball Invitational. Hey, it's best two out of three vs. Louisiana-Monroe!

Look, I don't want to split hairs here. I'm just glad some kind of Illinois school is involved somewhere. For the record, though, this tournament may be two to three notches BELOW the NIT. I don't care. We'll take it! So let's give it up for these Ramblers. There hasn't been this much excitement around here since that 1963 team.

CBI CHAMPIONSHIP SERIES

Game 1: Louisiana-Monroe at Loyola, 7 p.m. Monday

Game 2: Loyola at Louisiana-Monroe, 7 p.m. Wednesday

Game 3: Loyola at Louisiana-Monroe, 7 p.m. April 3 (if necessary)

All games broadcast on CBS Sports Network*

In other local college news, it looks like Johns Hopkins has joined the Big Ten—as a lacrosse school.

OK, hold on. The Bag is a Big Ten purist. I'm also an alumnus of a Big Ten school—you know, the best one. This isn't what we do around here. We do football, basketball and hockey. We do the sports of the Midwest. This is an Eastern sport. You want to row crew? Go to Harvard. You want to be a doctor? Want to be productive with your life? Yeah, there's a school for you. It's called Sloan Kettering.

Please, DO NOT contaminate our conference with elitist sports. Let's keep these silly activities confined to the Eastern Seaboard. Shame on you, Big Ten. Do what you do. Not what other people do.

More local shame, I'm afraid. Shame on the White Sox. They actually have done away with printed tickets for season ticket holders. Yay for the environment! You say.

Boo-hoo! I say. No more nostalgic ticket stubs. Yeah, those. The kind you pin up for years after you've gone to the event. Just a way of saying, "Yeah, I was there. Jordan scored 50 that night."

Take a cue from the Cubs. They're issuing beautiful tickets for the first night opener at Wrigley. That's something people will want. Not some e-receipt!

Wisconsin's Nigel Hayes, one of several Badgers who relishes testing stenographers' spelling, got caught in a candid moment Wednesday. "Gosh, she's beautiful," he said to his teammates during a news conference before the floor was opened for questions. Hayes immediately put his hands to his face after realizing his comment was broadcast for everyone to hear. Relax, Nigel. People like compliments.

1	What's going to happen in the White Sox's "Shark Cage" cheering section?	Good to see Samardzija on the South Side. There should be a lot of happy fans in the "Shark Cage."	I expect a lot of business deals to go down. Maybe the guy from FUBU will lay a couple of good offers down.	Sox fans will be eaten for not showing up to the games. Sorry, guys.	When the people stop cheering, they'll die.	First they'll replace that dumb hat with a giant shark fin hat, then throw in fans of the opposing team to get torn apart.
2	Cubs management vs. Kris Bryant's agent. Who ya got in that showdown?	I'm rooting for some good baseball! I can wait two weeks.	I have the Cubs' management's back. I understand what they're doing.	I've got Kris Bryant's agent, Scott Boras. He's a hustler. He'll get the dough out of the Cubs one way or another.	I would NEVER take Scott Boras in any situation. Unless I played professional baseball, then I'd totally hire him.	Cubs. They had a good way to ruining everything.
3	If you had to do it over again, which pro sports team would you enlist for your "promposal"?	I think I'd have to be loyal to my home team, the defending World Series CHAMPION SF Giants!	The Miami Marlins. There probably will be only a dozen or so people there.	I'd go with the White Sox. I'm one of the few fans they've got, so I'll stick with them no matter what.	Please don't ever use that fake word again. I mean, who would believe "enlist" is a word?	Detroit Lions. They know how to stomp out the competition .
4	The Yankees re-enacted part of "The Sandlot." What should the Cubs or Sox do to top that?	They should enlist the help of the Second City to perform a sketch comedy skit called "Play Balls."	I guess the Cubs and the Sox could do a rap battle, like in "Wild Style."	The fight scene from "Anchorman." Can you imagine Kris Bryant trying to stab Jose Abreu with a trident? Nasty.	The Sox: Re-enact "Eight Men Out" but make Reds the cheaters. The Cubs: Re-enact "Miracle." I think you know why.	"Major League." I can glue crossbones to my glasses and pitch hella fastballs to save the game.
5	How will you celebrate the unofficial start of running season in Chicago?	Obviously by running the Shamrock Shuffle! I can't wait to explore the city very quickly on foot during the race.	Probably the same way I would celebrate the end and middle: by not running as much as possible.	By watching. Oh, who am I kidding, I need to be out there, too.	By stepping in a ceremonial pile of uncollected dog poop.	By cracking open a beer on my porch and watching them run by.

Cubs get in a jam

As if a new video board and ongoing construction weren't enough to make for a memorable opening night, Fall Out Boy will perform before the Cubs' home opener April 5, MLB announced Thursday. "Centuries"—the band's platinum hit—will be televised live on ESPN2 at 6 p.m. Fall Out Boy also will play its newest single, "Uma Thurman," and "My Songs Know What You Did in the Dark."

HOT DATE

April 12

That's when Comcast SportsNet Chicago will premiere "Believe," a documentary chronicling the White Sox's World Series run in 2005. The film, which will air at 7 p.m., is narrated by "Homeland" star and longtime Sox fan Mandy Patinkin.

THE DIGIT

Dean Smith, the legendary college basketball coach who died Feb. 7, instructed in his will that $200 be sent to each of his North Carolina lettermen after he died, so they could "enjoy a dinner out." Classy to the end.

THE MOUTHWATCH

"If we're up by five runs and blow it in the top of the ninth, [fans think] 'here we go again.' That's [bleep]. You don't think the players feed off of that? ... It's time to say this team is a great group. They might not win the World Series, but they've got the talent." —"New Girl" star and Chicago native Jake Johnson, on the 2015 Cubs

SHOW AND TELL

HONESTY IS THE BEST POLICY FOR RISING STAR HALSEY

By Matt Pais | REDEYE

To get a sense of Halsey's worldview, you need look only at why, given the choice between Madonna and Rihanna, the rising one-named pop singer doesn't hesitate.

"Oh, Rihanna. Because I think that she's a [bleeping] badass," said Halsey, whose name is an anagram for her real first name (Ashley), by phone from SXSW in Austin, Texas. "I think that Rihanna is a true performer. I think her brand is incredibly impressive. And I love that she literally just does. Not. Give. A. [Bleep]. What anyone thinks of her. There's photos of her laying on her back on [an] island smoking a blunt while she's working out, and people are just raging about it, and she just shrugs her shoulders."

That might make it seem like the 20-year-old artist, who headlines a Park West show Friday solely on the strength of the five-song "Room 93" EP (and her dynamite voice), is an up-and-comer looking for shock value. That's exactly wrong. Hell, she chooses Kimbra over Kesha. She picks Bjork over Adele because Bjork produces most of her own albums. Halsey's not too cool to gush about how much she loved 'N Sync when she was 9, marveling sincerely that her own fans now obsess over her in similar ways.

She knows some arguably will misinterpret her honesty as vulgarity. And she correctly sees her transparency as an asset to her career—which, months before her full-length debut "Badlands" arrives in August, finds her as the most-mentioned artist at SXSW on Twitter, with a frequent place on Billboard's Emerging Artists chart and an upcoming slot at Lolla 2015.

"I'm 20 years old. And I'm not going to get online and imply that I'm perfect and imply that I don't do anything," says the New Jersey native, who sings powerfully and thoughtfully about isolation, relationships and sex and may tweet about being drunk but also tweets the hangover. "My honesty about the negative elements of my personality is what gives me a tremendous amount of freedom. If I have so much freedom as an artist, I'm not worried about anything coming out. Not worried about being exposed, not worried about something [destroying] my reputation because I put it all out there anyway to begin with.

"So a few years from now if a nude photo of me leaked somewhere, it wouldn't ruin [anything]. People would just be like, 'Oh, well, duh. It's Halsey; what did you expect?' [Laughs.] And they would accept that about me because I made that part of my personality something that's open."

She'd rather kids admire her goal to be positive and honest than her actions, recognizing her mistakes in ways many artists seem to hide behind a wall of branding. As Halsey puts it, "I think if I can encourage kids to be who they are and to accept who they are, I'd rather have them idolize that than the fact that I smoke a couple cigarettes before a show."

While the hotel-inspired "Room 93," a collection of songs that to me shows the promise everyone else heard in Lorde, is what Halsey calls "ethereal," she says the upcoming "Badlands" will be a lot bigger, with a live force that takes people by surprise. Her shows, which are influenced by Kanye (really), have been called unpredictable. Halsey agrees, citing a recent show in California when a fan ran on stage and tackled her.

"Obviously I don't encourage my fans to do that because it's dangerous, but it was definitely wild," she said. "It's a party; they're there for me, and I'm there for them. We all just hang out and experience the songs together. It's a lot less that I'm performing to them than a lot more like we're experiencing the music together. ... [The fan] apologized to me afterward. She just kind of wanted to hug me, and she thought that was the prime time to do it. During my closing song."

Did Halsey ever rush on stage and tackle a member of 'N Sync?

"I can't say that I did," she said. "But I probably thought about it."

"Not going to lie."

BEYONCE OR PRINCE

"Oh. Beyonce. I'm feeling really bad now; I'm picking all the pop culture icons. I think I identify with Beyonce because she's a woman and she's another true performer. But I think Prince is a real artist. I think that Beyonce is an incredible performer with an incredible brand. I think Prince is a conceptually incredible artist. That's a tough one, I'm sorry."

BECK OR KANYE

"It's obviously Kanye. Which, like, sucks. Beck is like ... [bleep], that's two completely different artists! I gotta go with Kanye because he inspires me so much in my music and in my brand. I saw his live show and I can say hands down—when I go to a concert, I'm an artist too, so for me it's more an evaluation of, 'Oh, they look like this, oh, that mix is pretty good.' When I saw Kanye that [bleeping] faded away into nothingness and it was like a revolutionary experience for me, and the cinematic element of his show and the powerfulness of his show really, really inspired mine. I think it's a ridiculous thing to say, 'I've heard a pop artist Halsey's live show is inspired by Kanye West's live show,' but it's very true. I think he's got power."

STING OR PITBULL

"Sting or Pitbull?! [Laughs.] Sting. Obviously. I think I just ruined my chance of getting a Pitbull feature, damn. I guess I'm not going to pop radio any time soon. I'm going to piss off some Pitbull fans if they read this. Damn. I don't know if Pitbull and I have any mutual fans. I'm pretty doubtful of that to be honest with you. But I hope I didn't piss anyone off."

Get Hard

"Hey, I'm working on a script. What do straight guys fear about going to prison?"

"Probably getting murdered or stabbed, same as anyone else."

"Nah, stabbing isn't funny. This is a comedy."

"Getting raped?"

"You're a genius!"

This embarrassing conversation assumably took place early in the creation of "Get Hard," a movie whose title is getting huge laughs somewhere from Beavis and Butt-Head or their real-life equivalents. To repeat, because it bears repeating, this is a comedy whose primary, immensely original joke is straight men's fear of being prison raped. Look, even if you have the all-time-funniest joke about pizza, tell it 50 times and it will leave a bad taste in your mouth (which is difficult to do with pizza). And that's obviously a long way from "Get Hard," whose dialogue generally involves variations of, "Help me not be someone's bitch" and "Fear of dick really will give a man strength." (Feel free to stop reading and see "The Hunting Ground," a great documentary about campus sexual assault. Or, if you want to laugh, "Paddington." Really.)

James (Will Ferrell), a millionaire so white the only other ethnic group he can name is "miscellaneous," needs to prep for a 10-year, maximum-security prison sentence after he's framed for securities fraud. So he hires cash-strapped car wash owner Darnell (Hart), who James just assumes has been to prison because one of three black men have, to show this Bel-Air square what to expect and how to fight it off. The result is a racist, misogynistic jumble of "Malibu's Most Wanted" and two recent, mediocre Hart movies ("Ride Along," in which Hart was the one needing to toughen up, and "The Wedding Ringer," in which the comedian also taught a dopey white guy how to fool people).

Some jokes from a pair of writers from the infinitely better "Key and Peele" and director/co-writer Etan Cohen (who actually wrote a few "Beavis and Butt-Head" episodes) not involving rape are funny. Who better than Ferrell to pull a laugh out of smiling in a gang photo or crying, "Oh, no, my body!" after regrettably picking a fight with men on a children's playground?

But Ferrell (funnier getting angry in "The Other Guys") and Hart prove a mismatch. Alison Brie's wasted as James' gold-digging fiancee, and James' constantly dancing black girlfriend may as well have been named Twerk. And the homophobia is everywhere, even in a song John Mayer writes about James. Because the best way to make your movie more likable is to get John Mayer involved.

Jennifer Lawrence and Bradley Cooper in 'Serena'

Serena
R

Breaking news: Jennifer Lawrence can't do everything.

In fact, she's surprisingly pretty bad in "Serena." It's part of why the third time is the embarrassment for the Oscar winner and Bradley Cooper, who shot this long-delayed effort in 2012 before anyone saw them together in "Silver Linings Playbook" and "American Hustle." And why the new movie, deprived the expected Oscar-qualifying run at the end of 2014, squeaks into theaters as if it starred no-names Jennifer Cooper and Bradley Lawrence. (Not real actors.)

Set in North Carolina's Smoky Mountains in 1929—and featuring more than enough shots to prove how the location got its name—"Serena" asks its miscast stars to adopt an old-timey cadence that doesn't fit them. When Serena (Lawrence) says things like, "I can assure you, Mr. Buchanan, I didn't come to Carolina to do needlepoint," Lawrence seems uncharacteristically uneasy, rather than authoritative. The film's most valid strand is the effort to make sexist loggers see Serena as George's (Bradley Cooper) business partner, not just his wife. In a scene of Serena coming to the aid of an injured employee (Rhys Ifans), slumping director Susanne Bier ("Love is All You Need") achieves the urgency the rest of the film stifles under pretty scenery and shallow depictions of why conducting illegitimate business might not be smart in the long term.

"I think we should be married," George, whose major goals in life involve hunting a panther and moving to Brazil, tells Serena seconds after riding up to her and introducing himself. Seconds later, they're doing something the horses aren't invited to overhear. "Serena" wants to be a sweeping, old-fashioned romance ("Our love began the day we met; nothing that happened before even exists," Serena tells her husband); instead it's an often-inept, unconvincing bore that earns unintentional laughs as George says things like, "Her father was a first-rate timberman." The script by Christopher Kyle (no relation to Cooper's real-life soldier in "American Sniper"), adapted from Ron Rash's novel, sets up jealousy and betrayal, but "Serena" never feels juicy. It's unable to identify why Serena worried about finding love, nor anything substantial driving her instant evil eye on George's ex/the mother of his child.

Perhaps the stars thought "Serena" could be the "There Will Be Blood" of the logging industry. What resulted takes all the excitement out of murder, deception and sponge baths.

Going Clear: Scientology and the Prison of Belief
NR

Before evaluating documentarian Alex Gibney's ("The Armstrong Lie") look at Scientology, it's worth considering how challenging it can be to understand any beliefs that are different from your own, even if they don't involve galactic overlords.

It's also worth acknowledging that as compelling as it is to see vivid anecdotal evidence of the controversial organization's sinister practices—who takes on the IRS and wins?!—it's arguably more valuable to consider who joins this world, and how thousands remain despite reports of torture and intimidation. Gibney's proven that he's unafraid to go after big-time subjects ("We Steal Secrets: The Story of WikiLeaks"), but he again winds up with limited opportunity to really dive into the more veiled side of his subject. Most of the film's talking heads are ex-members. What personality type joins Scientology, and if, as "Going Clear" seems to suggest, they are vulnerable people becoming victims to manipulation and brainwashing, why Scientology and not something else?

Gibney fails to address this, and a late-movie note about the accumulating power of the religion—by the way, it's also worth considering how to define "religion," as Scientology had to fight for that designation for tax purposes—doesn't reconcile how declining numbers and bad PR still can lead to influence just because Scientology leader David Miscavige (who in his younger days sometimes kinda looked like Seth Meyers) has purchased property around the world. Though what "Going Clear" does very effectively in adapting Lawrence Wright's book of the same name is identifying founder L. Ron Hubbard as a calculating, deceptive, ex-sci-fi-writer huckster who somehow converted a legion of followers, including stars like Tom Cruise and John Travolta, and then used their own personal information against them. Billion-year contracts? Planetary origins based on space planes? Um, to each their own. And Gibney also should have acknowledged that Scientology is hardly the only religion that seeks to garner money from its members and sometimes engages in questionable practices.

While there's no denying the chilling implications of the film and this organization, it's hard not to wonder about the many threads "Going Clear" leaves untouched. On a related note: "The Master" is sensational.

Danny Collins
R

Al Pacino in 'Danny Collins'

As brown liquor glides into a tumbler and cocaine sprinkles onto a glass surface, the scene could be any (cliche) pre-party for an artist waiting to take the stage. Then the guy applies a hair piece and squeezes in his gut with Velcro, and it's clear this rocker has seen better, younger days.

A million hangovers ago, Danny Collins (Al Pacino) was an up-and-coming musician whose lyrics drew comparisons to his idol, John Lennon. But Danny hasn't written a song in 30 years. Instead, he's cashed in on now-ancient hits like "Hey, Baby Doll" (whose catchy, mindless chorus recalls "Sweet Caroline") and built a life of wealth and debauchery that no longer satisfies him.

As it turns out, Lennon wrote to Danny in 1971, advising him to stay true to himself and his music—kind of generic advice, but if a Beatle tells you to remember to brush your teeth, you scrub like it's your job—but Danny receives the letter 40 years late. Now tortured by the credibility this famous correspondence might have generated, Danny and his piano move into a New Jersey Hilton to revive his songwriting passions. He also tries to connect with his grown son (Bobby Cannavale), the one every movie character like Danny never got around to meeting.

At the Hilton, Danny tells Mary (Annette Bening), the hotel manager who is unimpressed by his colossal fame and ridiculous affectations until suddenly she is, "We have good patter." But Pacino has good patter with everyone in "Danny Collins," and how could he not? Jennifer Garner co-stars as Danny's daughter-in-law, and Christopher Plummer plays his longtime manager and best friend. The cast easily could carry an Oscar-bait film, at least before Pacino decided to accept every awful movie that came his way, and the performances are uniformly affecting. Even the bit parts go to the girl from "Whiplash" (Melissa Benoist), who steals scenes as a hotel worker, and Nick Offerman, who opens the movie as a reporter.

The sometimes-stale "Danny Collins" is the directorial debut of writer Dan Fogelman, who has penned movies as charming as "Crazy, Stupid, Love" and as ... not charming as "The Guilt Trip." As a director, he struggles with the same issues that occasionally plague his writing—namely, needlessly hammering home points when he should have used a lighter touch.

Yet there's undeniable humanity and gentle humor running through this tale of redemption. Fogelman should trust that the audience can keep up without needing to see Danny flush his coke down the toilet.

CHEF JOSE GARCES AND COMPANY FIRE UP THE GRILL IN STREETERVILLE

By Michael Nagrant | FOR REDEYE

In Chicago, Argentine food may bring to mind the red wine hangover/meat coma that results from consuming too much BYOB malbec and skirt steak at Tango Sur. Or maybe you think of those South American churrascarias fueled by meat-wielding servers in gaucho pants (which are actually Brazilian-inspired, to be fair). "Iron Chef" alumnus Jose Garces and his chef de cuisine Cory Morris (both of Mercat a la Planxa) have launched Rural Society in the new Loews Chicago Hotel in Streeterville to disabuse you of those notions. "We want to show that Argentinian food is so much more, that you can come here and get a high-quality four-course meal with incredible ingredients, fresh off the grill," Morris said. I stopped in recently to see if the pair would succeed in redefining the essence of Argentine food.

Flamin' hot

The meat isn't all-you-can-eat at Rural Society, but it is flaming hot from a white oak-fired parrilla made by Grillworks, a company whose enthusiasts include the late, great James Beard and the very alive and awesome Alton Brown. The parrilla is kind of an open-pit barbecue with a cooking surface that can be lowered and raised by a hand-cranked flywheel for temperature control. Silvery, gleaming and spitting neon orange embers in the open kitchen, it's like a grillmaster's Bentley. The smoke drifting from the grill into the dining room made me feel like I was beholding a campfire while roughing it on the Argentine Pampas. Then again, the room—with thick cords of sisal rope that make up a cool faux-cathedral ceiling and plush tufted booths stuffed with suit-wearing dudes and glammed-up ladies—felt pretty luxuriant. Gold Coast Society might have been a better name.

The truffle life

The food keeps pace with the decor. I don't know if I've seen this much expense account-quality beef and truffles since I dined at Joel Robuchon in Las Vegas a few years ago. Truffle oil lightly scents a sizzling fajita-like platter of roasted cremini and oyster mushrooms ($12). The best use of truffle, however, was a sprinkle of shavings in the foamy whipped hollandaise that served as a dipping sauce for roasted fingerling potatoes. Those potatoes ($10) were hand-carved with graduated ridges that made them look like Lego hills. They'd also been brushed with lard, baked in a special convection/steam oven and crisped in a broiler before service. That ridging wasn't purely aesthetic; it added a nice textural component that sopped up a ton of the dreamy truffle-hollandaise sauce.

Decadent dough

I'm getting ahead of myself, though. Great consideration must be given to the bread basket, which is definitely one of the finer ones I've had in Chicago. It included a baked yucca flour-based puff filled with cheese that was very similar to a French gougere. I could live on these alone. But there was no need for that, as the airy focaccia topped with herbs and caramelized onion was also fantastic. The breads were accompanied by fresh chimichurri, red pepper salsa and butter whipped with malbec.

Sea clearly

To make myself feel better about my carb binge, I ordered the carpaccio de pulpo ($11) featuring thin slices of octopus drizzled with red wine vinegar, sun-dried tomato and crispy potato chips that had been soaked in malbec and fried. The paper-thin octopus was as tender a tentacle I'd ever had and I loved the brightening acidity of the vinegar. I kept with the seafood theme and dug in to a batch of taglierini ($21), a long ribbon pasta similar to linguine. It was a little overcooked, but the garlicky butter sauce infused with saffron and bottarga (dried, salted fish roe) and the briny sea-kissed cockles and rock shrimp tossed amidst the pasta made up for any noodle chewiness.

Chilling and grilling

Like those Brazilian steakhouses, Rural Society’s reason for being, though, is grilled meat. Even if you didn’t know it, you’d probably guess from all the black-and-white photos of prize-winning cows that adorn the restaurant’s dining room. Morris told me they procure a super-tender grass-fed beef from Uruguay. I sampled an empanada ($11) stuffed with beef belly and smoked chilis, but unfortunately, the beef was gummy and undersalted and the pastry was undercooked. Pamplona de puerco ($28), or heritage breed pork tenderloin stuffed with poached quail egg, carrots and chimichurri, was perfectly cooked to a medium-well. Because of old trichinosis scares, people tend to freak out about pinkish pork. Yet, high-quality pork like this displays a tenderness and minerality you just won’t taste if you cook it well-done. Though, once again, even with the grill-fired items, it’s seafood that shined. For $24, I scored a generous half lobster tail and a fat claw, both of which were smoky and tasted like they were bathed in butter (the whole portion is $48).

Cocktail hour

All that protein can make a guy parched. Thankfully, Rural Society has an interesting cocktail list. I especially loved the Fernet con Coca ($10) featuring Fernet Branca, muddled cherries and Tuaca, a vanilla-orange liqueur. The bitterness of the Fernet opened up my palate and had me almost salivating for dinner, while the sweetness of Tuaca took the edge off the Fernet. Mid-meal, I ordered the Cocovino ($8), a mix of cola, red wine and vanilla-chili sugar—sort of a play on the kalimotxo, a sounds-weird-but-tastes-good cocktail from Spain. The berry-rich fruit flavor of the malbec mixed well with the caramel in the cola and the sweet, spicy sugar softened the wine’s tannins.

Bottom line

With killer open-fired grilled meats and seafood and unique cocktails, Rural Society likely will redefine your idea of Argentine food, not as an all-you-can-eat meat buffet, but as a nuanced melting-pot cuisine.

Dungeness crab with maniac spice, corn, sausage and potatoes
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE

ROLL UP YOUR SLEEVES AND GET CRACKING AT THE ANGRY CRAB

SNAP, CRACKLE & POP

By Michael Nagrant | FOR REDEYE

A yearning for a taste of home is quite often a recipe for culinary success. That's what the brothers Nguyen—Mark (front of house), David and Irvin (in the kitchen)—are banking on with The Angry Crab in West Ridge. "We're all from California and there are these crab shacks all over the place," Mark said. "Every time I go back home, we head out to eat at one. But when my brothers would visit Chicago, we could never find one, so we decided to bring the concept here." I stopped in recently to see how their effort was faring.

The scene: Asian families chowed down at communal tables amidst anchors and other seaside decor. "We haven't done a lot of advertising yet. It's mostly word of mouth. There are a lot of Filipinos in Rogers Park," Mark said. "My fiancee is Filipino, and this is how they love to eat, family-style with their hands, it's called kamayan." Indeed, most of the folks around me are pros; one group brought a box of surgical gloves and went at it breaking open shellfish by hand.

The seafood: Live lobsters ($24.99 a pound) and dungeness crab ($17.99) are delivered daily by a few local suppliers, while live crawfish ($12.99 a pound—also a rarity, as most crawfish served locally is frozen) comes from a Gulf Coast supplier every few days. The hulking dungeness crabs were super-fresh, and littleneck clams ($10.99 a pound) were briny and tender. The prices are reasonable considering you'd pay about the same for most of it bought uncooked at a grocery store.

The seasonings: The concept is to pick your seafood and then match it with a housemade seasoning or sauce. Choices include "insane" lemon pepper seasoning, "grumpy" garlic butter sauce or "smoking" Cajun spice seasoning. You also can order the "maniac" blend, which is all three mixed together. Next, specify a spice level: There's the semi-spicy Ragin' Bulls mix, the spicy Ferocious Bears blend and the "hella spicy" Dangerous Hawks. I assume the Ragin' Bulls blend was created when Derrick Rose was hurt, because the Thai chilis in it barely registered. Ferocious Bears had a little more heat, but honestly, Jay Cutler's performance last season caused me way more pain. I steered clear of the Dangerous Hawks, which included scorpion and ghost peppers. My favorite was the maniac blend with a touch of the Bears spice. The lemon pepper got a little lost, but the garlic butter and Cajun seasoning melded well with the sweet crab meat. I stuck with the basic garlic butter bath for my lobster, which featured super-tender tail and claw meat.

The sides: You can order your meal "extra dirty," as the menu calls it, which is essentially in the style of a Cajun crab boil with red skin potatoes (50 cents a piece), andouille sausage or corn on the cob (both 75 cents a piece). The corn and potatoes had a nice bite, while the fantastic andouille was flecked with garlic and hot peppers. Cajun fries ($4.50) were crisp and golden like McDonald's, though not nearly as addictive, while garlic noodles ($8) with parmesan, herbs and garlic were soggy and bland.

MINI-REVIEW
The Angry Crab
5665 N. Lincoln Ave.
773-784-6848
Heating up

The service: My server only brought two shellfish crackers, so our party of four had to share them. I tried to flag her down for more, but she disappeared after our food arrived. The seafood was served in clear plastic bags, and though I dug the informal vibe, it would be good if the owners came up with some kind of serving vessel that doesn't remind diners of garbage.

The drinks: Since it's BYOB, I brought along some Goose Island Matilda Belgian-style pale ale and Pipeworks Citra pale ale. The Matilda was a little too delicate, but the hoppy, grapefruit bomb that is Citra really cut through the spice. Each table was equipped with a bottle opener, a smart touch.

Bottom line: The Angry Crab is a great BYOB spot serving up pristine, affordable family-style Cajun-spiced seafood. It really has no parallel in Chicago in right now.

Boston Club Punch ($12) at Bordel 1721 W. Division St. 773-227-9600
Just when we thought the speakeasy bar trend was over, comes a cocktail that reels us back in. At Wicker Park cocktail lounge Bordel, this punch is served in a teacup for one or a teapot ($50) serving four to five people—a nod to Prohibition-era secrecy, when booze was rumored to be served under the guise of tea at various high-end hotels. The punch features cognac, Jamaican rum, Grand Marnier, raspberry, lemon juice and sparkling wine, mingling citrus notes with a smoky oak base that builds to an effervescent, fruity finish. Poured over ice and garnished with a juicy pineapple wedge, it's a tasty testament to its history of spirits hidden in plain sight. TRIBUNE

THE DIGIT

2.5 MILLION

That's how much an Indiegogo campaign to fund "Super Troopers 2" had raised as of Thursday morning, surpassing its $2 million goal. There are still 30 days left on the Broken Lizard campaign, so if you're itching for a place in comedic history, donate $25,000 and the Broken Lizard gang will serve as bridesmaids and groomsmen at your action wedding. We're not making this up!

In the vault of history

The Library of Congress is locking away some important sounds. On Wednesday, Radiohead's "OK Computer" and Lauryn Hill's "The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill" were two of 25 sound recordings added to the library's National Recording Registry. The Guardian reports. "Pop music is not entirely positive in its outlook, shall we say," curator Matt Barton said. "I think we can say that OK Computer really sums a lot of that up."

Let's hear it for the GIRLS

Instead of releasing another version of its Top 99 Most Desirable Women list, askmen.com has decided to ask a different question: Who are the 99 most outstanding women of 2015? Well howdy hot damn! Emma Watson (from left) came in at No. 1 for her gender equality work with the United Nations. The list also includes UFC Women's Bantamweight Champion Ronda Rousey (No. 2), "Gone Girl" author Gillian Flynn (No. 40) and "Selma" director Ava DuVernay (No. 18) and. Hats off to you, men.

That's so Kendrick

On Wednesday night, Kendrick Lamar held a party, and all 4.74 million of his Twitter followers were invited. The rapper tweeted out two addresses in L.A.; at the first stop, he began his first live show in support of "To Pimp a Butterfly," held from the back of a moving flatbed truck. The A.V. Club reports. Police reportedly shut the whole thing down after Lamar rapped "[Bleep] The Police," showing just how uncool The Man really is.

2 YEARS

Olympic diver Tom Daley and "Milk" screenwriter Dustin Lance Black celebrated their second anniversary this week. "2 years ago I met my [frog emoji] and my life changed forever! Thank you for making these past 2 years so special," Daley tweeted. Aw, true love is a frog emoji.

Fade to black

Sam Taylor-Johnson has had her naughty fun, and she's not coming back for more. The "Fifty Shades of Grey" director said that she won't be returning to helm the flick's two sequels, thr.com reports. "Directing 'Fifty Shades of Grey' has been an intense and incredible journey for which I am hugely grateful," she said in a statement. The first movie has grossed $558.6 worldwide, which means whomever steps in is getting a pretty sweet gig.
